

THE NEW BIBLE

-The_False_Dream Investigation «Mega-Update»-

INTRODUCTION:

-It's been days that I've had the internal urge to create a summary of everything that the research "The_False_Dream" has been up to this point. This investigation has marked an entire stage of my life, and more than that, it's changing its course.

"The New Bible" will be a new starting point.

I'm writing it with the aim of immortalizing the new vision I've embraced of the world, humanity, and the universe. So, the purpose of this document, beyond serving as a personal general summary for myself, is that I hope it provides the reader with an introduction to what, for me, is already THE

NEW WORLD.

We have been describing this "new world" for some time now as the "new paradigm," which has also taken on other definitions such as the "great reset" or the "great change." It has also adopted a certain prophetic character for many, with the conception that the end of the world is approaching. My perspective is that all these definitions are valid because they all describe what will become a new reality for human beings.

Therefore, to establish this new reality, the old one must fall. This process requires a reevaluation of everything we considered as truth—a revision of everything we have been told since childhood.

And not just for us, but also what they told our parents, grandparents, and so on.

Over the years, and I'm referring to hundreds, and probably thousands of years, certain ideas have been established. These ideas have become beliefs and, ultimately, realities. Well, obviously, I'm not suggesting that ALL societies and cultures that have existed or still exist in the world have been or are wrong. But what I want to draw attention to is that the vast majority of them share common roots. These roots trace back to ancient times, thousands of years ago.

History books tell us that this beginning took place approximately 6,000 years ago in a region called Mesopotamia. Personally, I am certain that the knowledge that emerged from there didn't originate there but was inherited from even more distant times.

To this, I would like to add that all these beliefs and realities we were talking about are absolutely essential for human beings. Without them, we wouldn't be able to address the most fundamental and profound questions we can encounter:

"Who or what are we?" "Where do we come from?" and therefore, "Where are we heading?"

Providing answers to these questions will radically change the way individuals perceive the world, automatically leading to answers to other questions that arise, such as "Why are we here?" and consequently, "What is the meaning of life itself?"

These questions, and more importantly, the doubt in the face of the answers provided, are what drove me to undertake this investigation...

(Before starting, it's important to note that this document lacks any planning. Therefore, both the writing method and its order are products of the inspiration of the moment.

That said, I have decided that the three essential questions mentioned in the introduction will give names to the three chapters that will compose "The New Bible".)

CHAPTER 1: "Who or What Are We?"

-This question is the only one of the three that has been on my mind since before the research. In a way, it's what got me started on the path of spirituality and its practices.

I take it for granted that the question "Who am I?" in the spiritual realm is one that few have satisfactorily answered. But on a more basic level, I sense that the truth regarding "What are we?" is far removed from what most of us think.

I can't speak for everyone, but I can speak for what I've encountered in my surroundings. So, what I've encountered most often is the perception that the human being is simply "an intelligent animal." Within this view, there is also a misguided perception of the concept of an animal or a living being. Continuing along this line, a question I like to ask people is, "What do you think happens when we die?"

Usually, this question is followed by a long silence or an "I don't know." To which, I typically provide two options: "1- Do you believe that when the heart stops beating, and the brain shuts down, everything comes to an end? Or, 2- Do you believe there is something more that continues?" (In a way, I'm asking about the location or nature of the self.)

Where I'm going with this is that most of the time, people choose the first option, meaning that when our biological body ceases to function, the entire being dies with it.

Next, I'll accelerate the pace because my intention is not to question that question but to make the answer clear: the essence of the self goes far beyond the physical body. I've always intuited this, but one thing that the research provided is its confirmation. Through very clear phenomena like near-death experiences or more on an "esoteric" level through astral travels or regression hypnosis, among many others...

The conclusion that arrives at this point is the confirmation of the existence of what many of us know as the "Soul." This fact forms a fundamental aspect of "the new world." In this world, absolutely no one will have any doubt about the nature of living beings, and yes, I've included all beings, not just humans.

When we delve into the soul, we encounter a key aspect known as consciousness. This quality is present in all living beings, even in the plant world. This consciousness is a constant in the universe, and thus, it gives rise to a wide variety of manifestations.

I take this opportunity to introduce new concepts that provide context to this idea. One of them is vibration or frequency. This concept gives meaning and shape to all the reality that surrounds us. Starting from the quantum principle that everything is in motion, the speed at which atoms move in space determines the "hardness" of things. It can be expressed on a frequency table, where the lower the note, the more rigid the material. In other words, the atomic vibration of your arm is lower than that of the air around you but higher than that of a stone.

I'm summarizing this idea significantly, and I would like to add that the internet is a fantastic tool that allows you, if you genuinely want to understand these principles in depth, to find the appropriate information that will explain everything that quantum physics has been able to explain so far, and much more. Well, I've made this summary to tangibly and scientifically explain what many cultures and spiritual ideologies have been saying for ages: we are all one.

At the atomic scale, there are no barriers between you and me, even if we are on opposite ends of the planet. The same goes for the entire universe. Perhaps all barriers are mental...

But getting back to the origin of this chapter, this consciousness that makes us living beings, in some way, is everywhere. For some, this universal consciousness is called God.

Since we're at this point, I'll take the opportunity to reflect a bit on it and provide some insight into what, for me, the reality of this great principle, which we'll now call "The Principle of Vibration," entails.

This definition fits perfectly to justify why I believe this knowledge is essential for the "new world." It's essential because it provides context and explanations for phenomena that have, until now, been treated as purely esoteric. I find it necessary to start with the concept of dimensions. This concept suggests the existence of different planes of reality that coexist simultaneously. These planes are "separated" because they are constituted by different frequency ranges. The reality we see every day is the material world, which can be referred to as "the 3D world." "3D" stands for the "3rd Dimension," the one perceived by our five senses. Yes, I've seen different ways of counting dimensions, but this is the most common one. Well, this principle explains that what our eyes perceive, which is a very limited range of vibrations, is just a small fraction of what actually exists.

We can say that vibration is a fundamental aspect of the fabric of reality.

The exact functioning of higher dimensions becomes quite complex for various reasons, which is why I encourage anyone interested to explore the subject further (the information is out there!). Indeed, the issue of information, and specifically its easy accessibility, as I highlighted earlier with the internet, is a pivotal point that makes this moment in human history historic. Now, we can all access this knowledge, share, teach, verify, and do so more easily and rapidly than ever before. Continuing with the Principle of Vibration, I'd like to provide a quick overview of some things that are fundamentally vibrations and, as such, impact reality in one way or another. For example, sound, or the thoughts that cross our minds every day... The nature of emotions is also determined by their vibration.

Here, I could extend this discussion for a long time, but I remind myself of the goal of what I'm writing. I've provided an overview of "What we are," defining the nature of everything around us and arriving at a common point called consciousness. Now, to answer "Who we are," an individual and spiritual process is required, one in which I find myself, and we all find ourselves, and which I don't need to attempt to describe.

I'm aware that I've simplified things greatly, and in a way, one of the countless riches of this universe is the great complexity of it all, while simultaneously having a certain simplicity.

This could be represented by a field of study I'm just beginning to delve into: sacred geometry. This field has a direct connection with the world of mathematics, which we could perceive as the language of the universe. It's something that isn't invented but discovered.

It's something that, if we want to embark on the path of deciphering and comprehending the fabric and functioning of existence itself, becomes a mandatory subject. Within its incredible complexity, we can ultimately discern its simplicity, which manifests in certain formulas and proportions that repeat everywhere...

Undoubtedly, following this logic, we would eventually realize that we live in a fractal reality. This adheres to principles already described, such as the Law of Correspondence: "As above, so below."

This likely explains the patterns we observe from this physical plane, as described by the laws of thermodynamics. It also makes sense of the very definition of infinity, within which, don't forget, all possible options are found. Perhaps this provides an explanation for the theory already accepted by quantum physics regarding parallel universes and, therefore, parallel realities, all of which are formed from the same vibrational foundation as the rest of the universe.

All of this initially leads me to the absurdity of believing that there are no other forms of life throughout the cosmos. And starting from the sensation that life is the norm, not the exception, without delving into the Fermi Paradox or the Drake Equation, when we learn to access those higher states of consciousness where space and time cease to have the weight and limitations they do here, we will discover a new reality of pure abundance beyond our imagination...

This chapter has emerged as a foundation upon which to present the rest of the aspects that make up "the new world."

CHAPTER 2: "Where do we come from?"

This is the first question I decided to investigate thoroughly. We're heading to ancient Mesopotamia, what is known as "the cradle of civilization." Well, I don't want to dwell too much on reviewing the evidence behind everything I'm going to say because my goal is not to convince anyone but to present this information and let the reader take what resonates with them and leave behind what doesn't. However, I need to provide some data to put us in context...

History books talk about Darwin, who developed the theory of evolution through natural selection. This theory speaks of the preservation of genetics that are better equipped to survive in the environment. Instead of debunking it, I will cast significant doubt on it regarding human beings. One major factor for this theory to be plausible is the vast amount of time - we're talking millions of years - required for substantial changes to occur.

It's said that the first Homo sapiens appeared 200,000 years ago. However, the way in which they appeared so abruptly completely challenges the theory that aimed to answer the question we're exploring in this chapter. "Lucy," often regarded as the first hominid to walk on two legs, has NOTHING to do with human beings.

In fact, the transformation we can observe defies the criteria of nature itself. Evolution states that we should evolve towards a better version each time. Physiologically, Lucy walked better than us. Lucy had much thicker and robust bones compared to us. Not to mention the fact that we suddenly stopped being prepared for the natural environment overnight. We are the same as we were 200,000 years ago, and theoretically, we were still living in the wild at that time. However, if we were to place a modern human in the wild and see how they adapt, after a few days, they might die of hypothermia due to the lack of fur, or have their delicate skin torn apart for the same reason. They could even get sunburned. We can also observe that our muscles are 5 to 10 times less powerful. On a genetic scale, all primates have 48 chromosomes; we have 46, with a literal fusion of two pairs of chromosomes. This process is virtually impossible in nature, especially in such a short period. The Atropitecus, preceding us, had undergone virtually NO change in the previous 2-3 million years, and then suddenly...

I encourage anyone interested to research "Lloyd Pye," a man who dedicated over 40 years to investigating the origin of human beings (R.I.P.).

In this regard, I even doubt the veracity of the few pieces of evidence we have. If we shift our focus from paleontology to history, we find contradictions that are worth examining. For example, the Sumerian tablets (from the ancient Mesopotamian society) provide detailed accounts of how the human race was on the planet and well-organized 450,000 years ago. This can be found in tablets like the "King List," as a clear example. Furthermore, when it comes to the Sumerians, we can find their detailed descriptions of what they considered their gods, whom they called the "Anunnaki."

These beings (with Enki and Enlil as prominent figures) are described as descending from the heavens in flying "chariots." Their actions, appearances, and even their role in the creation of the human beings we know today are all detailed in these accounts.

Well, I want you to stay with me until the end, no matter how audacious all of this may sound. In the first chapter, I spoke of the common roots among many belief systems. Let's compare it with one of the most influential ones in the world we've lived in: Christianity. The Bible tells us that God created man in His image, much like the Sumerians. It also explains that this process took place in the Garden of EDEN. In the case of the Sumerians, it's described even more precisely how this process occurred, and it's said to have taken place in the Garden of ED.IN, among many other connections. (I should remind you that the first version of the Bible was written approximately 1,000 years before Christ.)

Well, we also have the topic of the great flood, and this is perfect for connecting not only with the Sumerians but with the whole world. In the case of ancient Sumer, we have the "Atrahasis" and the "Epic of Gilgamesh." These tablets describe the same story as Noah and his ark perfectly. This story can be found all over the world. "Mike Bara" identifies 35 cultures worldwide with the exact same story, while Graham Hancock finds more than 200 that share the premise of the great flood. This is a key fact that will slowly be understood it's meaning.

Let's make a connection between civilizations. "Mathew LaCroix" provides us with this extensive table of relationships among the ancient gods, according to their descriptions and actions:

Human Civilizations	Enki	Enlil
Sumerians	Enki	Enlil
Akkadians	Ea	Enlil
Persians	Ahura Mazda	Angra Mainyu
Greeks	Poseidon	Zeus
Romans	Neptune	Jupiter
Nordics	Loki	Thor
Slavs	Veles	Perun

You can also establish connections with the gods of South America, like Viracocha and Quetzalcoatl. However, the destruction of much of the information by the Spanish conquistadors makes the process of establishing these relationships much more challenging.

In and of itself, the task of relating all the mythologies, beliefs, and religions of the world could take a lifetime. Therefore, I felt compelled to follow where I believed the truth lay, through connecting the information with one another.

For example, the theme of the great flood narrated by so many cultures is one of those undeniable facts, in my opinion. Especially after discovering that around 12,800 years ago, at the end of the last ice age, a major cataclysm occurred that affected the entire world. It is known as the "Younger Dryas." Its nature appears to be that of a "Pole Shift," which creates extensive flooding.

Interestingly, all these cultures that narrate the flood also tell of the appearance of certain beings just afterward, who help humanity (or what's left of it) to resurface.

This event would explain the significant gap in history when it tells us that humanity in Sumer, from nothing – meaning simple hunter-gatherers divided into very small groups – suddenly came together, created massive cities, and learned profound knowledge such as mathematics, geometry, jurisprudence, religion, or the sexagesimal measurement system, which we still use today to count hours, months, and so on.

-The relationships were starting to make more and more sense.-

There's a concept called the "precession of the equinoxes." This is the circle that the Earth's axis makes every 25,920 years, which affects the night sky we see. Not coincidentally, it also forms what is known as a zodiacal cycle. This is why it's referred to as the "Great Year," divided into 12 "Great Months," described by the Greeks as "Aeons." Well, this is one of the great connections between ancient cultures because, although modern society has recognized this cycle fairly recently, we can find this knowledge in a wide variety of cultures. Like the Hindus, with what they call the "Yugas," the Hopi, or the most widely recognized by everyone, the Mayan calendar. This calendar specifically marked the end of a great year in 2012 to give way to the next one. Now, here's the fascinating part: the Younger Dryas took place approximately half a precessional cycle before that date... Coincidences on this level do not exist!

One of the reasons why all of this resonated with me so much is the fact that it provides answers to many more mysteries than the ones the "official version" addresses. And yes, one of the great mysteries that NO ONE has been able to answer to this day is how ancient structures like the pyramids of Giza, for the most well-known example, were built.

I highly recommend studying these ancient constructions, as the world is completely full of them. When you start looking, you realize the incredible complexity of the majority of them. And if you dig a little deeper, you'll be fascinated to death! We're talking about the fact that most of them couldn't be built with today's technology. We're talking about the fact that many of them have the most important proportions of mathematics engraved in their dimensions, like the number Pi or the Golden Ratio. Some even show us the Earth's diameter or the speed of light! We're talking about the most important ones being aligned with what is known as the "world grid." A concept discovered recently that includes energy lines created by the planet's magnetic field, crossing the world. They're also aligned with certain celestial bodies, or "with all of them," forming megalithic calendars like Göbekli Tepe. Or, as Wayne Herschel's forgotten research suggests, it could also be the case for the entire complex of the pyramids of Giza, or Teotihuacan, Cambodia, among others...

So I could go on for hours! And once again, there are people who have devoted their entire lives to researching the hidden secrets of these monuments, and now, with the internet, we can study all these investigations in a couple of clicks! All of this could be encompassed within what is called "the intervention theory."

In summary, it explains that Planet Earth has been visited by other extraterrestrial races "forever." Some of these figures, as we have seen, are represented as "gods" by many societies...

Recently, I read a book by "Credo Mutwa," an African man from a Zulu shamanic lineage. In this book, he describes some of his findings during his travels, not only among the majority of ancestral tribes in Africa but worldwide.

I highlight the work of this man because there is a significant differentiation from most investigations into our origin. It's the fact that he's not studying the ancient texts of the most important and well-known cultures, where we've seen countless connections I've mentioned in the previous paragraph. Instead, he embarks on a journey through lost and forgotten tribes, whose origins are equally or even more ancient than the societies mentioned so far (tribes like the Dogon or the Zulus...). But, perhaps less surprisingly now, they describe the same origins: "Gods" who came down from the sky and bestowed knowledge and wisdom about the secrets of the universe...

The preservation of this knowledge also follows another pattern: it is passed down from generation to generation by the priests of these tribes, who are called Shamans.

From the book, I quote, "No matter how deeply you probe into the interior of the black continent (Africa), you will repeatedly find very ancient stories that are incredibly similar. You will find African tribes and races that will tell you that they are descendants of gods who came down from the sky thousands of years ago. Some will tell you that these gods came from the sea in magical ships made of reeds, wood, copper, or even gold."

This book is, therefore, a great collection of all these stories that tribes from Africa and beyond have passed down through the generations. They provide such levels of detail and interconnectedness that I couldn't recommend it more to anyone interested in uncovering our origin. The book is called "Reptilian Alien and Africa's Hidden History."

Despite its shocking nature, I emphasize the part of "Hidden History." After dedicating a significant amount of time to researching all the available information, I have no doubt about the intention of the world's major powers to conceal/occult the truth.

This, I seriously believe, may be one of the most fundamental aspects to understand regarding the "new world." It's also one that tends to provoke the most resistance when people hear about it. This resistance is quite logical since it presents the possibility, as I mentioned in the introduction, that a significant amount of the information we've been given until now is a lie. This information, which we would never doubt for its veracity, as it comes from beloved family members, friends, qualified scientists, government entities, media... It reaches a point where the importance of the information does not depend on its origin but rather on its alignment with our new common sense. This new common sense represents the new paradigm and a new way of seeing the world, which, when given space, will resonate much deeper than the version we've been provided until now – the "official version," the great dogma, the grand deception.

This conclusion didn't stem from belief in an alternative figure or from a discourse that presents more controversy. Instead, it came from my own selection process in contrasting a significant amount of available information. This process was about filtering, starting with finding what resonated the most with my being, and most importantly, seemed to explain a much more coherent story than what is presented to us "officially." It's generally a challenging process. I discovered that sometimes, precisely the information with the most stigma, the farthest from the dogma, the most criticized by "experts," or outright labeled "conspiracy," was the one that aligned the best with "the new world." But it did so logically, coherently, and, in many cases, even in a way that could be considered "scientifically correct."

I want to focus for a moment on the fact that the real difficulty of this process often lies in external acceptance. It includes the difficulty of not discriminating and the automatic ridicule that most people will direct at it without even giving the information an opportunity for objective consideration. The dogma affects us all, and we eventually find ourselves having the same opinion as a certain sector of the population but precisely opposing the other half of it. The fact that it can be opposed to "the enemy" is one of its justifications. We can see this clearly in the political sector, but it can also be extrapolated to the scientific, historical, and social sectors. It's a mental state that has led us to constant separation, conflict, and war, forgetting that we are all the same beings on the same planet. The separation among us is not natural; it's entirely conditioned. In fact, if we look back at recorded history, we can see how long this control system has been established on planet Earth.

Within the sadness that accepting this reality brings me, a glimmer of optimism lifts me by reminding me that this is about the "old world." Soon, it will be buried beneath what will be the New World! However, this New World could not exist without what has undoubtedly been a dark period in human history. To understand where we are and where we are going, we must first understand where we came from...

This chapter, therefore, had this purpose: to shed some light on the fact that our origin is not what we've always believed. And once again, it's a fact that should give us confidence in realizing that if our history has been what it has been, it's not a fault of our human nature, but the conditions under which we've been subjected. These conditions have confined us to a very limited form of existence. They've made us slaves to ourselves, created generational traumas, the consequences of which we suffer today. They've warped our everyday lives, made us hate each other and ourselves. Most importantly, these conditions have made us forget who we truly are.

I understand that I haven't provided a concise answer regarding our origin. In fact, it continues to be a mystery in many aspects for all of us. However, step by step, by eliminating where we know we don't come from, we are getting closer to defining the final answer.

In the second part of this "Bible," we will delve much deeper into each aspect.

CHAPTER 3: "Where Are We Heading?"

I'll use this chapter as a conclusion of everything that has been presented so far. Because to know where we are going, we need to have a clear understanding of both the nature of the reality in which we live and the journey we have taken so far.

I start from the beginning, on an individual level, when the soul incarnates. It's the moment when we forget everything that is. And we immerse ourselves in the world of matter, a plane of existence dominated by certain powers that understand the workings of reality perfectly (and I will soon describe their nature and origin), and therefore designed to make it harder for us to remember. They implement tactics to suppress us and prevent our connection with what was, is, and always will be our purest state of being.

Repeatedly, in the esoteric world, I have come across the concept of the Prison Planet. It's a concept that hasn't entirely fit for me, but through studying what's known as "Karma," I have come to understand it better. The soul, ultimately, incarnates in physical dimensional planes to learn. The nature of these places, especially Earth, is unique.

The wheel of reincarnation and Karma are topics that demand a deeper study to truly understand and provide a better explanation. But essentially, we come here when our soul decides to come and learn a specific lesson. In theory, it incarnates, learns, and ascends again. This is where Karma comes into play. It represents those lessons you haven't learned, and, therefore, you will be asked to return and resolve them. These lessons can indeed be resolved anywhere in the universe unless their specific nature is only found on Earth. These lessons can also be healing processes, in which you need to heal a specific trauma. So, it appears that especially traumas related to sex tend to be processes that can only be healed on Earth. Therefore, even if you die and your soul ascends, it will be recycled and sent back to heal the specific trauma or learn the necessary lesson. The fact that certain traumas only exist in specific places is due to their vibration, which can be unique to a location in the universe and not repeat elsewhere.

The point is that these lessons or unhealed traumas, when not overcome, can be passed down through generations. This is a common process, and we can be accumulating karma from many previous generations. All of what I'm explaining has a very specific reason, and to express it properly, I need to clarify the nature of those in power in this world.

We move through time to a point where I don't have all the threads tied together yet, but I'm starting to understand the reality hidden behind it. Approximately between 8,000 and 6,000 years ago, at a moment when very important knowledge about the nature of what we've been discussing, but much more detailed and profound, is discovered or given to us. It's a moment we've already mentioned, in which humanity is recovering from one of the most challenging catastrophic events our planet has experienced in its history. It's a moment when certain beings arrive, whom we will trace and name in the next installment of "The New Bible." Suddenly, humanity acquires a great deal of knowledge from out of nowhere.

Now, placed at this point in time, I'm confident that this knowledge wasn't given entirely to "the masses." It was brought and inherited by certain bloodline families. Of these, the priests were their public face, and remember, they were the ones directing the population. The connection at this point is very clear to me; these royal bloodline families were those who bridged the gap between heaven and earth. As described by the great cultures of the time, they were gods descended from the sky (the beings mentioned earlier) who were seen by very few. Consequently, knowledge was segregated highly selectively. This is where the initiation factor comes in. It's a process repeatedly described, in which the chosen individual goes through a series of trials or rituals, after which they became a priest and were given certain knowledge.

As we can see, this is the same behavior adopted by a wide variety of mystery schools or occult societies. The best example is in modern Freemasonry.

Well, my research still has a long way to go in these areas, searching for all the existing connections. Although with what I have so far, I have enough to deduce the functioning of these powers, which are still active today. For example, tracing the origins of Freemasonry back to ancient Egypt, and possibly even further!

As we can analyze, all of this is revealing certain organizations that may have been united and highly hidden since the beginning of our written history. In the very moment when certain knowledge, when hidden, was transformed into power. Due to the fundamental nature of this knowledge, it explains who we are, what we're doing here, what the fabric of reality is, and how to manipulate it.

If we take a look, it's not an entirely crazy option, especially given the direct connection between secrecy and the priests who shaped religions and beliefs, which still carry significant weight in manipulating the world today. Although, as we've also seen, they might just be the puppets of certain entities of an "unknown" nature that control the world from the shadows.

And they do so by considering mechanisms that we (the masses) are just beginning to understand on the surface. If you add to this the fact that these beings and their minions seek power and control, if you look back into history, you'll see that they have been achieving it for a long time! Beyond that, they employ techniques we haven't even been able to consider until now. These techniques are based on factors much deeper than economics, media, or wars. When applied specifically, they create large amounts of karma that accumulate from one generation to the next, making its resolution within a single lifetime almost impossible and creating a cycle of reincarnation that we haven't been aware of until now.

Therefore, we find ourselves in a truly apocalyptic moment. The word "apocalypse" comes from the Greek "Apokálypsis," which means "revelation," in other words, "lifting the veil"; reveal what has been happening so far and what we haven't noticed. (Interestingly, the last book of the New Testament is called "Apocalypse," also known as "Revelation").

Seen from this perspective, it might seem like the problem is too vast to confront on our own. However, my friends, all ancient beliefs, those that predate this very system of control, speak of the period we are entering as the time of ascension! It is described in great detail as the human resurgence from the darkness in the coming years.

The powers that control the planet have nothing against the brighter aspects of our being. Their control tactics have primarily aimed to induce ignorance among the population, so they neither have the intention to discover who/what they truly are nor to see the real situation we are in. But the mere fact that you are reading this is strong evidence that their era of power and control is coming to an end.

Today, we all have a specific role to play, which is possibly the choice of embracing the light. Yes, it's a moment of choice. Individually, we must ask ourselves which path we want to take: one of fear, guilt, and hatred, or one of love, joy, and compassion.

This is where the realms of the spiritual path come into play, which have been denied to us for so long. In this path, individuals self-reflect and begin to notice new aspects that had gone unnoticed. We become aware of the potential we possess and how it has been suppressed. We realize that the decision is ours, as the barriers are created by the mind. Through self-observation, we find the traumas we've come to resolve, where they come from, and how to overcome them. This collective effort will create a new momentum, allowing humanity to ascend to a new chapter of its existence: "THE NEW WORLD!"

And yes, where we are headed is towards making the new paradigm a reality. It's through the individual decisions of each one of us that we can create a new world that we may not be able to fully conceive yet but can begin to imagine. I see it as the liberation of humanity—a liberation from the conditions to which we've been subjected, conditions that don't resonate with who we truly are. The human being is a magnificent being, often dominated by the mind, which tells them what's real and what's not, what's right and what's wrong, what to believe and what not to. But if there's one thing I've realized on this journey, it's that the mind is highly manipulable. And all that has happened to humanity so far (Where we come from) gives us hints about where we need to go. To a new reality where we don't let the mind take control. A new era of self-mastery. How fascinating that it all brings us back to the starting point, where we described a constant in the universe: consciousness!

So, to conclude this first installment of "The New Bible," I'd like to position myself with sincere humility. I identify as someone who can't give advice to anyone because I myself am just beginning this journey towards the "new world." However, I can highlight certain attitudes I've adopted and certain processes I'm going through that I consider essential steps: First and foremost, I'd emphasize the willingness. I define it as a particular state of mind. It's a state in which I had to make room for new information to enter. So, a mental predisposition to new information that could potentially challenge everything I had thought up to that point. It's undoubtedly a process that can be highly disorienting and perhaps painful. A pain that also struck at my pride, which didn't want to be wrong. I didn't want to have been wrong for so long. Another step was to acknowledge what this new process entailed beyond accepting new realities. Because at a certain point, I understood that one of the most essential first steps is self-healing. It's a process I'm still deeply immersed in, and it has brought me periods of pure darkness along with much light. Because it required me to enter places, moments, traumas that my mind didn't want to, and still doesn't want to. So, it's an acceptance of the darkness within me because it's a part of who I am and what I've come to learn in this life, what I've come to experience. And from what I've seen so far, this is one of the primary ways to heal soul wounds: to feel them, accept them, and navigate them. However, it's a highly personal journey for each person, and the nature of the challenges and the circumstances in which the individual finds themselves will make the process unique.

Well, I'll close this piece by immortalizing my intention when I wrote it in the way I did. Firstly, I want to make it clear that it has no intention of convincing anyone of anything. Simply, it provides certain information that has resonated very deeply with me, and I think it can do the same for others. As a reader, take what serves you and leave what doesn't. You know the truth intrinsically. The only thing I can recommend is to open your mind, even if it's just for a moment, and give a space for the information to reach your being and decide what it's good to remember and what's not.

I sincerely thank you for reaching this point in the reading!

This delivery was intended to provide a general overview of what I have discovered so far about the reality in which we live.

My research continues, delving deeper into certain aspects I consider fundamental for understanding the world, the universe, and existence. I hope to deliver a new installment of "The New Bible" soon.

Thank You
